It's spring.

A beautiful rainbow flower, with petals red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet tinted, is enjoying the first warm march sun.

Suddenly a gust of wind bends its corolla left and right, left and right.

Now the wind is so strong that flower is forced to bend its head forward and it can see a long line of ants making a circle around its stem.

Finally the wind calms and the rainbow flower can raise its head and it sees in the sky a nice butterfly which it greets shaking its little leaves.

There is something in front of it: what is it?

A nice sparrow that our flower tries to cuddle.

But, what is this buzz?

They are bees, greedy of its nectar!

The flower shakes the leaves right and left, to make them go away.

They don't fly away so the flower tries again and the bees fly away.

But here comes a hungry bear!

The scared flower starts to punch the big animal.

The bear quickly runs away.

The flower, afraid of the bear coming back, stretches it self upwards in order to see faraway.

The bear is not in view anymore and the flower relaxes.

Now it bends to tell its friends the flowers all the adventures of that day.

There is also a special guest: a little frog who jumps happily in front of its nose.

But exactly in that moment, a child arrives to pick the rainbow flower.

All the animals scream "Nooo! If you pick a flower, he who comes next won't see its beauty. Respect nature!"
